HELP FILES and WINDOWS 7

Our products were developed using context sensitive help, (saves you from having to search every time you want help
- it means we have put the exact help you need, related to the activity you are currently performing, at your fingertips immediately, saving you time and ensuring you get the specific help you need when you need it.
(Of course our help file does have fully comprehensive searching facilities should you ever need them).

Starting with the release of Windows Vista and continuing in Windows 7, Microsoft does not ship the Windows Help program (winhlp32.hlp) as a feature of Windows.
If you are using Windows 7, In order to use our context sensitive help file (highly recommended) you must first download and install the program (WinHlp32.exe) from the Microsoft Download Centre

This is quite simple to do and in most cases you will be prompted to do this automatically by the Windows 7 operating system the first time you click the help button when using Pi.

To download the required file copy and paste the link below into your internet browser http://www.microsoft.com/downloads/details.aspx?FamilyID=258aa5ec-e3d9-4228-8844-008e02b32a2c&displaylang=en

* Note: There are two versions of the winhelp32.exe available for Windows 7. Microsoft do supply instructions to determine which version of windows 7 you are running ((64 bit or 32 bit(X86)), so please follow them to ensure you download the correct version of the winhelp32.exe file for your computer.
